Introduction

Bullying in schools is every parent's worst fear. They may fear that their child is being bullied, that their child is bullying others, or that their child is witnessing bullying happening around them. All parents want the security of knowing that school is a safe place for their children, a place where they can not only learn, but build new friendships and create lasting memories. Unfortunately, the end of bullying is still not in sight, and it still threatens the wellbeing of children around the world.

These digital resources have been developed to support you, as a parent, to address the topic of bullying with your child.

Step 2. Discuss each of the points with your child and ask them if there are any points that they do not agree to and why. If they are reluctant to follow one of the steps, open a discussion on the topic and gently explain to them that these rules are to keep them safe, and they will only be allowed use the internet and social media (if they have it) if they follow these rules.

Step 3. Sign the contract with your child, and then frame it or stick it on the fridge in your house. Try to keep it somewhere where your child will see it so they are regularly reminded of the rules they have to follow.

Tip sheet for Parents

TIP 1: Get to know your children's online friends

It is easy to make friends online. It is fast and easy, but if you do not know that person in real life, you never really know who you are talking to. It is important to help your child learn the difference between a real friend and an online stranger, and instruct them to never arrange to meet online-only friends face-to-face.

TIP 2: Set reasonable time and usage limits

Make sure to establish specific rules outlining how long your child can spend on the internet, and what specific apps / websites they can browse.

TIP 3: Spend time online with your child / children

Find opportunities where you can join your child online. For example, if your child is researching the internet as part of a homework assignment, or even if they are playing an online game, join them when the opportunity arises. This will also help you to become familiar with the games your child uses and will help inform you about how safe they are.
